Energizing the European public space

The 17th European meeting of cultural journals

The 17th European meeting of cultural journals that took place in Tallinn, May 14–17 2004 discussed the state of transnational public spaces for cultural and political debate in the context of the European integration project. Can there at all be a common Europe without a pan–European public sphere, where potentially common values and ideas can be formed and transnational political institutions can find their legitimacy?

Central to this conference, Eurozine publishes a speech on the creation of such a space: Carl Henrik Fredriksson, Eurozine's editor in chief calls upon the established national European newspapers to carry forward a pan–European public sphere.

The article is now available online in English and Swedish:
