Victory Day: The biography of a Soviet holiday

Mischa Gabowitsch
8 May 2020

What began in the Soviet Union as an occasion for military propaganda gradually became a national holiday to honour veterans of the ‘Great Patriotic War’. Today, 9 May is both a geopolitical tool for the Russian state and a grassroots practice, serving as a way for Russian-speaking minorities abroad to express their cultural identity.

Published 8 May 2020

Original in French
Translation by Mike Routledge
First published in Eurozine (English version)
Downloaded from eurozine.com (https://www.eurozine.com/victory-day-the-biography-of-a-soviet-holiday/)
© Mischa Gabowitsch / Eurozine